BANG'S DISEASE

It has been brought to our attention that a new case of Undulant Fever has been discovered in the Wainwright district. Bang's Disease in livestock is responsible for Undulant Fever in humans. Undulant Fever is a very serious disease and we understand there is little or no cure. With Vet services available in the Wainwright Municipal District also the Agricultural Service Board and other Farm organizations available to assist in the organizational work, there is no excuse for districts not making arrangements to have their Milk cow tested and Heifer calves vaccinated. I am only too willing to offer my services to assist in organizing districts so that this dread disease may be stamped out, and if nothing else the health of our children protected. Some districts have done a very thorough job of vaccinating and blood testing, and if they can do it so can everybody else. Just ask the man with Undulant Fever what he thinks.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD
It has been suggested to me that the National Film Board showings are not doing what was originally planned for them. The original plans were to have equipment available for Agricultural meetings in order to show the public Special Agricultural Films, also to assist the National Film Board in their educational program which is considered a very valuable service to the rural population. The regular circuit program and special agricultural films are being taken care of every five weeks. It was originally planned to purchase a camera and slide projector, and in the course of my regular duties apart from running the National Film Board circuit, I would take slide pictures of agricultural interest in the district, and at each show have a discussion on some phase of agriculture with the aid of the slides. This latter part of the program has never come into being.

Each child should include his age and grade with his entry. Contest closes Dec. 20.

There will be an FUA meeting at Roseberry school on Dec. 14. Lunch committee to be Mrs. Jack Taylor and Mrs. Fred Younker.

At the annual meeting of the Battle River W.I. held at the home of Mrs. G. Penton the following officers were elected for the coming year.

President—Mrs. R. Dempsey; First vice-president—Mrs. E. Pascha; Second vice-president—Mrs. A. Bacon; Secretary—Mrs. W. Steele. Plans for a Christmas concert with treats and gifts for the Patterson; Treasurer—Mrs. C. 13 public school and pre-school children of the districts were completed. This will be held in Crescent Hill School. Tickets are being sold on a Doll displayed in the Co-op window to assist in the project.

Game hunting has been a popular outdoor sport are being staged in various sections of this district. The results so far are very disappointing with very few coyotes being destroyed. The last hunt here yielded one we understand.

The Courier's Lament

Here is just a short epistle,
That the mail man has in mind,
When the wintry winds do whistle
And the horse is almost blind.
He likes to find the boxes
Just exactly four feet tall,
With posts straight and sturdy
And guaranteed not to fall.
Is your box too high I wonder?
Or is it too low down?
Is it leaning too far backward?
Or is it lying on the ground?
If it's on the right hand side of the road,
Then the courier will agree

Luth. Leaguers Convention Adopts New Theme

The Edmonton Circuit Lutheran League met at Convention at Bardo Lutheran Church, Tofield, Alta., Pastor Sterling Johnson's charge, under the theme "Let Christ be Lord." Pastor Osborne Olsen of Dawson Creek was the guest speaker. Pastor I. Saugen of Viking conducted the Bible study on Philimon. Saturday morning the election of officers took place, with the following officers elected:

President—R. Jacobsen, Bethania League, Sedgewick.
Vice-President—Andy Heibel, Bardo League, Tofield.

Corresponding Sec.—Lily Nelson, Sharon League, Irma.

Recording Sec.—Milo Holte, Kingman League, Kingman.

Treasurer—Eunice Satre, Sharon League, Irma.

PTL Sec.—Stella Thompson, Viking.

"Leaguer's Echo" Editor—Bernice Magnuson, Ryley.

Assistant Editor—Mrs. Sterling Johnson, Ryley.

Musical Director—Ila Moen, Bardo.

League Advisor—Rev. T. M. Haekstedt, Edmonton.

The theme "Let Christ be Lord" was discussed by various Leaguers under the topic:

In Your Choice of Amusements: James Hendrickson, Bardo.

In Your Witnessing: Lily Nelson, Sharon.

In Your Choice of Work: Rita Neal, Edmonton.

In Your Choice of Life-Mate: R. Jacobsen, Bethania.

These topics pointed out the great necessity to "All hail the Power of Jesus Name—And crown Him Lord of All."

Saturday evening a film from the International League Convention at Saskatoon was shown. Immediately following the session a social hour in the form of a Scavenger Hunt and Impromptu Program was very much enjoyed, proving that Christ can be Lord in the Choice of Amusements.

Highlights on Sunday afternoon's program were several numbers from the Charter Members of Bardo Lutheran League, who were celebrating their 40th Anniversary of League work. The History of the Bardo League was reported by Mrs. George Hendrickson.

Rev. Nels Pedersen, Minneapolis, was a visitor and preached the Confessional address on Sunday morning. Also in attendance was the C. N. A. District Lutheran League President, Mr. Norman Foster, Grande Prairie, who was in charge of the installation of the new officers on Sunday evening. The registration committee reported that 13 delegates and 101 visitors registered for the convention.

The Convention was brought to a victorious end as many "Let Christ Be Lord" of their lives and others re-dedicated themselves to His Service. "Thanks Be Unto God, who giveth us the Victory!"

JOHN DEERE ... The Quality Name in Farm Equipment

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY

A Quiet But Pretty Wedding

By M. J. COLLINS

"Oh! Isn't he the darling!" Peggy, my sister, exclaimed when she really saw our two-and-a-half-year-old son, Rick. He'd been under her nose, so to speak, all the time, but there was an excuse for her. Peggy would be married in a few minutes. Young Rick was wearing a white satin suit and it was my express job to see that he kept it clean. Peggy had thought it would be cute for Rick to be the ring bearer and the wife agreed with her right away, so I kept my opinion to myself. Well, it would soon be all over.

The bridal party were in the vestibule of the church waiting for the wedding march to begin. Mary, my wife, was making a few last-minute adjustments to Peggy's wedding dress.

"Now you know what you're supposed to do, son?" I asked sitting down on my heels. He nodded his blonde head vigorously. "I'm to carry the ring on the cushion to the front of the church, and then to say a word." He rattled the words off quickly.

"Oh, leave him alone!" my wife said impatiently. "or you'll have him all rattled. He knows what to do. We had enough rehearsals to make everything easy. And," she continued, finishing with Peggy's dress, "you'd better hurry to your seat, we're ready to start up the aisle."

Slipping something unobtrusively into Rick's hand I did as she suggested, the usher showing me to my seat on the left side of the church.

Old Max, our organist, swung into the strains of the wedding march. Once upon a time he'd been an army sergeant and any music with the word march, well, it was played with that definitely in mind.

I could see the wedding party coming down the aisle out of the corner of my eye. Bill, the bridegroom, and his first man were peeking nervously through the drapes at the vestry door waiting to converge on the party. I wondered if he felt weak in the knees like I did the day Mary and I were married. A few seconds later the sonorous voice of Reverend Middel filed the church as he began the wedding ceremony. Rick was doing his part like an expert, in fact everything was going along perfectly. Dad had gone back to his seat at the right moment without prompting, although I could sense my wife who was the matron of honor, getting ready to dig him in the ribs as he got muddled. Rick was standing to one side holding the silver cushion steadily in front of him. The best man reached out for the ring and Rick suddenly started to cough and choke, dropping the cushion. My wife moved quickly to him and pounded him vigorously on the back. Finally he managed to gasp, "I swallowed it!" I think everyone in the church heard him. My wife gave a frightened little cry and grabbing him up in her arms began to pound harder.

"Where's my wedding ring?" Peggy asked, not seeming to understand what had happened. The whole family crowded up on the wedding party.

"Hold him up by the heels and shake him, it might come out," someone suggested.

"Thump him a little harder."

"I'm only trying to get married," Peggy wailed.

"He swallowed it," my wife said, "we'd better get him to a doctor immediately."

"Maybe he only choked on a hair," the best man said hopefully. "I almost did when I was a kid. Let's look on the floor for the ring."

Every available man dropped to his knees and began to scrutinize the floor minutely. "Here, use this!" My wife pulled off her wedding ring and pushed it into Bill's hand. "Hurry, Dan, and let's get this young mfn to the doctor's." Taking the now quiet

Rick out of her arms, we hurried out of the church. "Rick's all right, Daddy," he insisted, but I wasn't too sure of that. Behind us the bridal party remustered to get Peggy and Bill married.

Our doctor's office is at the other end of town, but since it's only a small place we reached it in a few minutes. Just as we were getting out of the car Rick took something out of his pocket.

"Oh, my gosh!" my wife exclaimed loudly, "here's the ring! He had it in his pocket all the time!" She turned to him relieved, but angry. "You bad boy, telling fibs like that. Scaring everyone half to death!"

"Hey, don't," I stopped her. "Maybe he did swallow something. What did you do with the candy I gave you in church?"

"I swallowed it, Daddy."

"There it wasn't the ring at all, I said almost triumphantly."

"Why," my wife demanded, "did you give him a candy? Of all the hairbrained things..."

"I gave it to him so he'd stay quiet," I explained lamely. "You know what a perfect imp he can be if he ever gets started."

"Poor Peggy will never forgive us, but why I'd like to know, did he put the ring in his pocket?"

"Daddy said the best place for a ring was in a man's pocket," Rick nodded his head with emphasis.

"Well," and I didn't like the tone of the wife's voice. "Just how are you going to explain that, Dan Wright?"

"Don't you think it would be better if we returned to the wedding?" I mumbled.

Our local newspaper said something about the Howland-Wright wedding being quiet and pretty. The reporter that wrote that would have to be blind and deaf, but what could I do? ... my wife suggested very sweetly just how I was to write it.

West Is Fish And Game Paradise, Says Sask. Senator

OTTAWA. — "I remember one time..." began Senator Walter Aseltine of Rosetown, Sask., as he set about regaling the Ottawa Fish and Game Association with a succession of lively and informative sporting anecdotes.

His stories told at the Museum ranged from boyhood with a bamboo pole in Perth, to Big Trout Lake in Prince Albert National Park where the waters in his day contained no smaller lake trout than a 16-pounder.

For the many persons who looked upon Saskatchewan as a dry prairie province, Senator Aseltine revealed the fish and game paradise in the north, claiming for Lac La Ronge that it was the greatest fishing lake on the North American continent.

He compared the conservation projects now supported in Ontario with the work of "Ducks Unlimited," a society of American sportsmen who came to the rescue of the Saskatchewan town of Plenty. The lake dried up, the ducks and geese winged that way no more; until Ducks Unlimited began damming operations — then there were plenty of birds once more.

Sensor Aseltine's five-point plan for conservation, with which he concluded, was: Sanctuaries; sterner penalties; more sanctuaries; conservation education in the schools, and the enlistment of the women's interest and support.

He was introduced — and his campfire flitted pickered highly commended — by Frank Wall, a companion on past fishing trips.

In a brief address President Brink Smith said the association's 17th year had been as successful as its predecessors, and urged the continued protection of game fish and wild life, "now more than ever necessary."

The association had grown steadily from a membership of 200 in 1932, he revealed, to its present size, 1,100 strong.

It looks a little bit more like winter but is still pleasant weather. Our winter sports will be a trifle late getting organized but no one minds that if it's only the summery climate at fault. We understand that Mr. K. Dawson has begun to make ice for the skating rink while Jack McKay is taking care of the curling rink.

Mr. Jas. Fenton is making fine progress following his recent operation in the Royal Alek hospital. There is nothing more common than the common cold.
